Panda, the Guide Horse

Ann is blind. Ann has a guide that helps her work and get around. Ann's guide stops at curbs. The guide leads Ann across busy streets when it is safe. The guide touches door handles so Ann can find them. The guide gets in cars and rides on trains. The guide goes with Ann into grocery stores and on picnics. The guide picks up keys or other things Ann drops. Who is this guide? It is a horse! It is a real, live, miniature horse!

Ann's miniature horse guide is called Panda. Panda's coat is black and white. Like other horses, Panda has a long thick mane and tail. Unlike other horses, Panda is quite small. She only stands 29 inches (74 cm) at the shoulder. She only weighs about 120 pounds (54 kg).

Panda stays with Ann at her house. Ann is a teacher, and Panda goes with Ann to Ann's school when Ann is working. Panda knows where every room is in the school. Panda rings a special bell when she needs to go to the bathroom. The bell is tied to a door. When Panda rings the bell, Panda is taken to a special area where she can relieve herself.

A Horse Lesson in Good Manners

Boys and girls, you need to learn some good manners! You need to learn proper behavior! My name is Toby. I am a miniature horse. I work as a guide. I work hard helping someone who cannot see.

I had a special trainer. The trainer trained me by clicking a clicker. When I did something right, she clicked the clicker and gave me food as a reward. I was never punished. My trainer taught me how to use stairs. She taught me how to get into cars. Do you know what the hardest thing she taught me was? It was not using stairs or getting into a car. It was learning how to wait. It is very hard to wait. It is very hard to stand and do nothing.

I learned how to do something hard, so I know you can learn how to do something hard, too. You must learn not to touch me without asking. It is not good manners to touch me when I am working. I am working even when I am waiting. If I am petted, I do not know if I am still working. I might think it is time to play. Then I might have a hard time getting back to work.
